Brief Description of Research Project – The intent of this study is to examine the activity-travel patterns for non-mid-week days (Friday through Monday) and examine differences in activity participation over the days of the week and the changes in these weekly patterns over the last decade using data from two national-level surveys from multiple years (trip-based and time-use surveys). The focus is on modeling the maintenance- and discretionary- activity decisions (duration and time of day) as such episodes are not undertaken on a daily basis and are likely to be undertaken on non-working days.
